

Please join us for an overview of the Dallas Midtown Project

To inspire conversations about how to make Dallas an even greater place to live for people of all ages, AARP is working with the City of Dallas on a five-year strategy to improve livability for all ages in Dallas. The effort aims to put attention on priorities – or “domains of livability” like: outdoor spaces and buildings, transportation, housing, social participation, respect and social inclusion, civic participation and employment, communication and information, and community and health services.

A group known as iACT (Innovation in Aging, Caregiving and Technology) on meetup.com will be the host for monthly talks. The June meeting will feature Scott Beck, president and founder of Beck Ventures, a developer involved with the Dallas Midtown project, a major urban redevelopment effort that calls for a mix of corporate, resident and retail spaces that feature safe sidewalks and pathways friendly to pedestrians and bicyclists.

Join the talk and see how you can help make Dallas an even greater place to live.

WHEN: Wednesday, June 24, 2015 / 5:30 – 7:00 p.m.
